CALL OF THE WILD

When chilly winter bites our skin we feel an urge within us to move around. We plan a visit to a relative living elsewhere, another city or place, a bit far from us. Or, we go for making a fresh trip to a place we have been fantasising for a long since. Whatever it is, we feel an impulse to get out of home, to pass a few moments with the nearest ones outside, and to have some food and fun there for a few moments. We just get euphoric to break the dull daily routine work, hence make an attempt to hang out in the lap of nature. We feel a call of the wild during this time of the year.

Picnic is arranged this way. We along with our friends, relatives, colleagues, and neighbour flock together in a certain place and enjoy foods and fun there. One thing is familiar. The location must be a bit far from home as we want to forget the mundane things of home this time. The wild touch of Nature – a fresh touch of greens, air, under the bare sky is a must have. A stream, mountain, or woods can add some more spices to that ambience.

All of us are certainly not a poet. In fact, nowadays, a few people choose poetry to pass the time, as we have a plenty of options for fun now than ever before. Today's generation rather choose Technology than Tagore. But we feel the vibes of the verse in our mind at times. Do we ever ask ourselves why this happens to us?

In one sense civilization is the invention of the laws of the Universe. The more we discover the laws the more we control the desperate Nature in favour of us and henceforth we ensure our survival strategy. We get refined and elegant, we feel like a conqueror.

But the ancient forefather, the cave man still exists within us who call us at times to get a bare touch of the lap of the nature. Once we belonged to her, and in course of time we fall from that.

Nothing is wrong with getting euphoric at times. This winter go wild with fun and picnic.
